4.2 CITIZENSHIP

4.2.1 Introduction

In political theory, citizenship refers not only to a legal status which means the ruled are full and equal participants in the political process. Democracy and citizenship go hand in hand. Citizenship focuses on the attributes of individual citizens. Citizens have certain rights that differ from one country to another.

Natural citizens are the citizens by virtue of their birth but naturalised citizens are the ones who acquire citizenship.

Aristotle defined citizenship with reference to the birth place, family lineage and culture.

4.2.2 Citizenship and the City-state:

Citizenship was an important theme in the ancient Greek and Roman Republics but they disappeared from the feudal systems. This was later revived as a desirable aspect of civic humanism during the Renaissance. Citizenship was considered only as participation of duties during the ancient Athens.

4.2.3 Marshall's Analysis

According to Marshall, a liberal-social democrat links citizenship to social class in the context of capitalism. citizenship has three essential divisions: civil, political and social. Every individual requires a right for freedom and that is what is in as civil component. As a citizen we have the right to participate in political decision-making process.

Aristotle

Defines citizenship as "he who has the power to take part in the deliberative or judicial administration of any state."
