proletariat. It is in this premise that Marx and Engels vouch that "the history of all hitherto existing society is the history of class struggle".

In conclusion the Communist Manifesto simply places two ideas side by side; "to raise the proletariat to the position of the ruling class" and "to win the battle of democracy". Marx in this work also emphases that the communist should aim to replace private property with public control of all properties. Marx and Engels may not have changed the world, but they certainly changed the way we interpret it. The historical significance of the Communist Manifesto is that virtually all socialist parties, from the Communist Party of China to the Trotskyite sect, owe a lesser or greater debt to the ideas expressed in its pages.

Das Capital

Marx's masterpiece, Das Capital, the "Bible of the working class," as it was officially described was published in 1867 in Berlin. Only the first volume was completed and published in Marx's lifetime. The second and third volumes, unfinished by Marx, were edited by Engels and published in 1885 and 1894. The first volume deals with the process of production of capital; the second volume deals with the process of circulation of capital; the third volume deals with the totality of the process of capitalist production.

Dialectical Materialism

Dialectical Materialism is a philosophical approach to reality derived from the teachings of Karl Marx and Friedrich Engels. In theory dialectical materialism provides both a general world view and a specific method for the investigation of scientific problems. Marx and Engels look at every basic sections of society as materials and change in society takes place only through "the struggle of opposites". Materialism principally dealt with social world. The material world has always been in constant motion, contradictions and change. Marx believes that friction caused by constant motion in the society leads to contradictions within the society, which eventually leads to change in the society. Dialectical Materialism relates to the process of change in the society.
